a patient in a double-blind study who gets niacin as a placebo might think that the flushing means that they got the active drug, not the placebo, thus triggering the placebo effect.